State of emergency in Missouri

Governor activates National Guard ahead of grand jury decision

Los Angeles Times

Missouri Gov. Jay Nixon activated the state's National Guard on Monday and declared a state of emergency in anticipation of a grand jury decision on whether to indict Ferguson police officer Darren Wilson in the shooting death of Michael Brown.

"These additional resources will support law enforcement's efforts to maintain peace and protect those exercising their right to free speech," Nixon said, noting the guard will "free up law enforcement officers to remain focused on community policing and protecting constitutional rights."

Under the executive order, St. Louis County police will be responsible for securing Ferguson protest areas.

The St. Louis County prosecutor has said he expects the grand jury's decision later this month. The Justice Department also is investigating Brown's death and the Ferguson Police Department, but has not announced when its inquiries will end.

"All people in the St. Louis region deserve to feel safe in their communities and to make their voices heard without fear of violence or intimidation," Nixon said in a statement Monday.

Local police chiefs praised the decision to call in the guard, whom Nixon activated during protests following Brown's death Aug. 9.

for the potential of a violent backlash in the streets following the grand jury decision.

Some residents and business owners are preparing for the grand jury decision by arming themselves. Adam Weinstein, owner of County Guns, which serves the Ferguson area, said he made more sales during the past three months than he did last year. Other local gun dealers said they have benefited from a similar spike. Classes for first-time gun owners and those seeking concealed handgun licenses are packed, some booked through January.

Many of Weinstein's customers said they were buying guns because they were afraid of what might happen when the grand jury announces its decision, and they wanted to protect their families.

"We're expecting things to get really bad," he said

Weinstein moved his gun shop from West

Florrisant Avenue in Ferguson, the epicenter of the protests, to nearby Bridgeton after he had to hole up inside and defend it from looters in the wake of the Brown shooting. He said racial tensions in the area have become palpable.

"It's about to boil over. Unfortunately, this is going to be the catalyst. It's been a long time coming," Weinstein said. "That's why most of us are in fear—it's been building for a while."

5 QUESTIONS ABOUT THE GRAND JURY IN FERGUSON CASE

Los Angeles Times

No one really knows what is going on inside the room where grand jurors are weighing the fate of white police officer Darren Wilson, who fatally shot Michael Brown, an unarmed 18-year-old black man, on Aug. 9 in Ferguson, Mo.

But, based on how grand juries usually work, and statements made by officials in recent months, we have a sense of the process, which is expected to end soon with either charges against the officer or an exoneration.

WHAT IS A GRAND JURY?

A grand jury is the body that examines an incident and decides whether to bring charges. It can use its subpoena power to demand that documents be produced, can hear witnesses and weigh the evidence. It can return a "true bill," or indictment, and the defendant is then arraigned on the charges and guilt or innocence is determined by petit jury. If the grand jury finds that no charges are merited, it can choose not to indict, also known as a "no bill." In many jurisdictions, grand juries are also used to investigate and issue reports pointing out flaws in official systems.

WHAT DOES A GRAND JURY DECIDE?

A grand jury can return an indictment if the evidence shows a probable cause that the person committed the crime. The indictment doesn't mean that the defendant is guilty of anything, merely charged. To be convicted should require more of a burden of proof than simply being accused.

WHAT HAVE THE JURORS DONE?

They have listened to witnesses and looked at evidence such as autopsies. It has not been made public how many witnesses have testified, but Wilson reportedly has appeared and told his side of the confrontation with Brown. According to a variety of reports and news conferences, several witnesses are believed to have testified about what appears to be an altercation between Wilson and Brown at the officer's car. At least one shot was fired with Wilson in the car and hit Brown in the arm. However, that shot did not kill Brown, who fled with Wilson in pursuit, according to reports. Brown either tried to surrender with his hands up or he charged Wilson, according to differing accounts. Wilson fired a volley of shots, including the fatal one.

WHAT ARE THE QUESTIONS THE GRAND JURY MUST DECIDE?

We have yet to learn all of the details, but there are clearly many questions the jurors are likely to weigh: What was Wilson doing when he stopped Brown and a friend on a public street? Was there a struggle at the car and what are the details? Did Wilson intentionally kill Brown or was he negligent? Did Wilson use excessive force in firing at least six times to subdue Brown? How far away was Wilson when he fired the fatal shot? Were Brown's hands up or down? Did Wilson fire out of fear for his life or that Brown would commit violence against others?

WHEN WILL THE JURORS VOTE?

That is the $64,000 question as the St. Louis area tensely waits.

How to navigate your winter commute, from poop trains to puffy coats

GOING PUBLIC

tribune.com Stracyswartz Rachel Brusstar, 24, has only been riding the CTA for two years but she already knows how to sniff out a winter commuting phenomenon: the poop train car.

Brusstar thought she hit the jackpot last year when she caught a Red Line train during rush hour and was able to score a seat because there were few riders in her car. The doors closed on the train-and she realized she wasn't so lucky. She smelled feces but was determined not to spot the source of the stench.

"I tried to not look anywhere, just out the window," said Brusstar, of Lakeview. "I got trapped for one stop."

Poop train cars - the result of CTA riders using rail car seats as their personal toiletstend to rise in the winter as homeless people take shelter from the cold on the Red and Blue lines, which operate 24 hours a day.

Poop trains are just one of the joys of winter commuting in Chicago. There's also cozying up to strangers under heat lamps on outdoor rail platforms, moving slowly on rail station staircases to prevent slipping on snow and squeezing into narrow seats on a rail car with aisle-facing seats that don't seem to be built for puffy coat wearers. And let's not forget the game of slush-dodging when a bus pulls up to your stop.

Officials at the CTA say the agency is prepared for another polar vortex-an arctic cold front that brought days of sub-zero temperatures last winter and served as a test of commuting fortitude for brave Chicagoans who ventured outside their home.

On the bus side, the CTA has checked bus heaters, engine thermostats and batteries to make sure they will run smoothly in the cold and secured windows and roof hatches, CTA spokeswoman Catherine Hosinski said.

On the rail side, the agency has stocked up on sand and salt for outdoor rail station platforms, where overhead heat lamps keep riders warm. CTA rail cars also have snowplow blades to remove snow and ice and sleet scrapers to clear the third rail, which supplies CTA trains with electricity.

As for poop trains, Hosinski said the CTA is working with the city and social service agencies to encourage the homeless to go to shelters or use other services.

As you cram into a rail car or bus full of people resembling snowmen with thick scarves, feather-stuffed coats, furry hoods and oversized gloves, it may seem like there are more passengers than usual, but CTA ridership tends to dip in November and December because of school holiday breaks (students tend to take CTA buses to class) and a drop in tourism compared with the summer.

In January, the CTA logged its lowest bus ridership total in recent years—20.2 million rides, down nearly 17 percent from January 2013—which the CTA blamed on the polar vortex. The agency found that riders tend to take trains, not buses, in extreme cold to avoid slow traffic amid slippery road conditions.

Kimberly Britt, 26, said she dreads winter commuting, in part because of a bad experience in January when there was a stretch of

WINTERIZE YOUR RIDES

Going Public has a few tips to make your winter commute sunnier.

- » Stay away from the poop car: As a train approaches the station during rush hour, make sure you are not boarding a car with few or no people. Riders tend to switch cars if the car they are on has a heavy poop stench. Smell before you sit.
- » Stay upright: Slow down when taking rail station stairs. The CTA salts its rail station platforms and stairways but watch out for slick conditions. Ride, don't slide.
- » Stay indoors as long as possible: Use Bus and Train Tracker to avoid long waits in the elements. The CTA offers heat via lamps on outdoor rail station platforms from Nov. 1 to March 31. Most of the CTA's 11,000 bus stops don't have heat lamps.
- » Sharing is caring: If possible, travel light to save space. Clutch your purse or backpack close to you and don't put it on the seat next to you. You paid for one seat, not three.

sub-zero temperatures.

Britt said she was stuck on the Diversey station platform waiting 20 minutes for a delayed Brown Line train. Though she was bundled up in a big coat and huddled under the heat lamp, she found her body didn't embrace the belowzero conditions.

"My knees turned purple and it hurt to walk," said Britt, of Lakeview.

Maggie Cassidy, of Wicker Park, said last winter she experienced delays on the Blue Line, which has some of the CTA's oldest rail cars, because of problems with train doors closing in the cold.

Nevertheless, she prefers the Blue Line to the Green Line, which she takes to visit family in Oak Park, because Green Line trains have the 5000-series cars with the aisle-facing seats.

The controversial 5000-series cars operate on the Pink, Red, Purple, Yellow and Green lines. Because of negative feedback from riders complaining about cramped seats and crotch-level views on the 5000-series cars, the CTA said its next rail car design won't have mostly aisle-facing seats.

Cassidy, 30, said she often chooses to stand in the cars with the aisle-facing seats but will sit down if she can find two seats together. She said she's more strict about this rule in the winter, when riders are carrying around more physical bulk from coats and other outerwear.

"No matter how big a person is, they get bigger in the winter," Cassidy said. Still, she said she's not dissuaded from riding the CTA in the winter, adding, "I would still rather be on a crowded train than sitting in traffic."

Final Riot Fest repair bill for park: $150,000

Organizers say Humboldt Park fixes are complete

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

Riot Fest organizers announced Monday that repairs to Humboldt Park, damaged during the three-day music festival, are complete and the price tag is $150,000.

However, stretches of the Northwest Side park, home to the fest, remain closed to the public. Areas around the baseball fields are fenced off, and patches of mud are visible at the north end of the park where the fest's headliners played in September.

Thousands of concertgoers flocked to the fest, bordered by North Avenue to the north, Division Street to the south, California Avenue to the east and Kedzie Avenue to the west. And heavy rains helped turn the park into a muddy Slip'N Slide.

"It rained and we damaged the park. Not only did we fix it, but, we're always setting our sights on helping make Humboldt Park world-class," Riot Fest founder Michael Petryshyn said in a prepared statement.

"To me, it's one of the best parks in the U.S., let alone Chicago. There's an ought here on our end to make sure we are part of the beautification process."

Repair work to areas of the park included grading, reseeding, adding topsoil and soil aeration, according to a news release issued by Riot Fest. The areas around the ball fields were addressed immediately, organizers said, to get them ready for the baseball season which starts in March. Fencing was installed to protect the areas where repairs were made.

The damage was less costly than anticipated. Organizers said the price tag for the repairs was roughly $150,000, which was less than the $182,000 cost estimate but still more than the estimated $54,300 spent on grounds repairs last year when the festival had a smaller footprint.

Comparatively, Grant Park had turf damage after this year's Lollapalooza, costing promoter C₃ Presents $260,544 to fix. Restoration of Grant Park into a grassy, green lawn was recently completed, and chain-link fences were removed to reopen the park to the public.

In addition to paying for the Humboldt Park repairs, Riot Fest organizers for the second year will distribute 600 turkeys to neighborhood families in need on Nov. 24 at the 26th Ward office at 251t W. Division St.

"There is a profound duty on all of us to think community and family first no matter if it's the 26th Ward or more affluent areas across Chicagoland, Although this is just a drop in the bucket, our plan is to fill that bucket going forward," Petryshyn said in the release.

Organizers also announced they are forming a nonprofit organization called The Riot Fest Foundation that will "further the festival's charitable efforts focused to the Humboldt Park locale," and raise money for college scholarships and community-based enrichment programs.

The goal for the first year is to raise $500,000 to support local nonprofits, charities and scholarships, according to organizers. LVIVANCO@TRIBUNE.COM I @LVIVANCO

Millennium Park skating rink opens, just in time for cold

By Rachel Cromidas | REDEVE

Millennium Park's ice skating rink is now open-just in time for the first blast of winter this season.

The rink opened Friday and, weather permitting, will remain open through March 8, according to Christine Carrino, a spokeswoman for the city's Department of Cultural Affairs and Special Events. As in years past, admission is free but skate rentals are S12 a day.

The Chicago Park District will open its seven outdoor ice skating rinks citywide Nov. 28, remaining open until March 1. The McFetridge Sports Center's ice rink, $843 N. California Ave., is open year-round.

The seasonal rinks include:

- McKinley Ice Rink, 2210 W. Pershing Road
- Midway Ice Skating, 1130 Midway Plaisance North
- Mt. Greenwood Ice Rink, 3721 W. 111th St.
- Rils Ice Rink, 6100 W. Fullerton Ave.
- Rowan Ice Skating Rink, 11546 S. Avenue L.
- Warren Ice Rink, 6601 N. Western Ave.

Wedding bells for Manson?

Manson

Notorious mass murderer Charles Manson has obtained a license to wed a 26-year-old woman who has visited him in prison for seven years. According to records with the Kings County Clerk-

Recorder, 80-year-old Manson and Afton Elaine Burton applied for a marriage license Nov. 7.

Manson has been incarcerated at Corcoran State Prison since 1989. He is serving a life sentence for his part in the 1969 Tate-LaBianca

Burton, who also goes by Star, reportedly moved from Illinois to California to be closer to Manson and told Rolling Stone magazine last year that the couple planned to marry. "I'll tell you straight up, Charlie and I are going to get married," Star told the magazine. "When that will be, we don't know. But I take it very seriously. Charlie is my husband."

But Manson denied Burton's claim at the time, telling the magazine, "That's a bunch of garbage. ... We're just playing that for public consumption."

If the wedding goes forward, the convicted killer probably won't have an opportunity to consummate his marriage anytime soon. Manson, who is serving a life sentence and has been denied parole a dozen times, does not qualify for overnight family visits, which are better known as conjugal visits.

Officials for Italy's Tuscany region and the island of Giglio said Monday they would seek a total of $274 million in damages from Costa Cruises, a unit of Carnival Corp., for the 2012 Concordia cruise liner disaster. The Costa Concordia was carrying more than 4,000 passengers and crew when it struck rocks off the Tuscan island of Giglio and capsized, killing 32.

Sierra Leone doctor dies of Ebola in U.S.

A surgeon who contracted Ebola while working in Sierra Leone died Monday of the disease at a Nebraska hospital, medical officials said, the second death from the virus out of 10 known cases treated in the U.S. Dr. Martin Salia was a native of Sierra Leone and a permanent U.S. resident.

Shipped body parts linked to Americans

Thai police said Monday two Americans suspected of trying to send infant and adult body parts in parcels to the U.S. had fled Thailand. A baby's head was found Saturday at a shipping office in Bangkok in parcels destined for an address in Las Vegas.

ROSE STILL HASFAITH

No one's going to get him to rush back from injury

Chicago Tribune

Derrick Rose missed his second straight game since suffering a strained left hamstring and did not play in Monday's highprofile matchup against Chris Paul and the L.A. Clippers.

"There's no need for anyone to play through injuries with the talent we have on this team," Rose said. "Just too bad it's me. Try to get back out there as quick as possible, but wait until I'm 100 percent."

The Bulls are calling Rose day-to-day. But given how conservative they have been with a player returning from missing all but 10 games the past two seasons to knee injuries and the fickle nature of hamstrings, it's possible, if not likely, Rose will miss more time.

"For sure, especially when you have knee problems or knee injuries. Hamstrings are huge in the process of coming back," Rose said. "They control everything in terms of accelerating. You need them a lot, especially the way that I play.

"Getting better every day. Still taking my time. It's calming down. It's not as sore. Just trying to listen to my body again and get the most out of every day."

Rose has played in just five of the Bulls' 11 games. How does he not get frustrated?

"Just having faith and knowing at the end, this is a little process I'm going through right now," he said. "In the end, it won't matter. I think we're going to have a big year. I think I'm going to have a big year. Just having faith in that and knowing."

TEST OF PATIENCE

Derrick Rose missed the opener of the Bulls' seven-game road trip Monday, which made fans sad because it would have pit him against one of the NBA's best point quards in Chris Paul. Here's a look at the rest of the trip and how upset fans will be if he misses each game (on scale of Apoplectic to Whiny to Meh). REDEVE

Thursday at Sacramento: Apoplectic

At this point he'll have had a week between games. That's enough even for football players.

Friday at Portland: Meh

That's where he tore his MCL last year. Wouldn't be the worst thing to avoid any lingering bad mojo.

Monday at Utah: Whiny

If the Bears end up losing to Lovie Smith, Josh McCown and the Bucs on Sunday, Chicago will be in need of a pick-me-up.

Nov. 25 at Denver: Whiny

We'd love to see an in-game dunk-off between Rose and Nate Robinson. Pretty please?

Nov. 28 at Boston: Apoplectic

Yes, the Celtics have Rajon Rondo. But it's the day after Thanksgiving, so the Celtics should be slower than usual and shouldn't strain Rose's abilities too much.

Nov. 30 at Brooklyn: Meh

It's more important if he plays in the first home game after the trip, when high-powered Dallas visits the United Center on Dec. 2.

Derrick Rose. Cross your fingers that the Bulls star survives Friday's game.

	How is Jimmy Butler playing so well with a strained thumb?	Playing for fresh cash will mo- tivate you.	Toughness from that other team that plays at the UC must be rubbing off. Take note, D-Rosel Go Hawks!	Unlike Rose, he's not worried about his ability to sign auto- graphs in 20 years.	Because it's a strain. And he ap- parently doesn't care about fu- ture graduations of future kids.	That's just a little joystick thumb. Never slowed down any bachelors before.
2	What would you consider a successful Bulls road trip?	For Rose not to reinjure his knee–AGAIN, i.e. Portland last year!	Games with enough of a Bulls lead that our old boy Nazr actu- ally gets to play!	If Rose could make it through without an eyebrow strain keeping him out for the season.	Couple of wins. No injuries. A quiet D-Rose.	Ringling Bros. not mistaking one of their clowns for Mel Tucker.
3	What were the Bears ticket holders who didn't show up Sunday doing instead?	Getting a head start on Christmas shopping.	Busy fixing their computers after Kim K's butt broke the Internet.	Shoveling their driveways.	Watching Marc Trestman's stel- lar clock management from the comfort of their warm homes.	Somewhere nearly intercepting Jay Cutler.
4	Why was Scott Darling the Hawks' backup goaltender of choice early this week?	Darling is the team's "new" mascot.	Because "Niemi Said No!" HA!	Darling, why are you asking me hockey questions after a Bears home win?	It's the circus trip. Gotta have a Darling in there somewhere.	Is this a test to see if I watch hockey?
5	If you were picking the College Football Playoff teams, what would be your top priority?	Whoever has the best cheerleaders!	Which team has the highest graduation rate. Oh, I'm the only one who cares about their education?!	Which tight ends look best in the tight pants.	I'd sure like a team in there with high moral standa— WELP.	Keeping the stars off instagram.

ome bartenders embrace the Prohibition-era haber-dashery; others just throw on the same liquor brand hoodie they've worn for weeks. Danny Shapiro does neither. You might catch him behind the bar at Logan Square's Slippery Slope or Scofflaw in a bolo tie, or maybe a vintage-printed button-down or a double-take-worthy pair of Nikes. Whatever he's wearing, you can bet he stands out—and looks comfortable doing it. As part of RedEye's November of Dressing Nicely, Shapiro clues us in to his favorite boutiques, the pants he designed with Chicago's Stock Manufacturing and the quirky article of clothing he couldn't live without.

Were you a stylish child?

No, absolutely not. Most of what I wore came from my brother. ... He happens to be 6'4" nowadays and was pretty much always a good amount taller than I was. So my early dressing days consisted of ill-fitting clothes and baggy attire.

KBERNOT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEEYEATDRINK

What function do clothes play for you?

Functionality is a significant factor in what I'm choosing to put on my body. Also, they make a statement. They're a way to represent or demonstrate your personality. I do wear silly things, loud patterns, big colors. People don't seem to have any issue approaching me behind the bar or asking questions or being themselves, which I appreciate.

Tell me about your collaboration with Stock Manufacturing.

We did a bartenders' series—Robbie Haynes, Austin Skyles and I—and each of us designed our own piece of clothing [with Stock]. I did pants, Robbie did a shirt and Austin did suspenders. We talked about fabrics, stain resistance, warmth, practicality, a place to put my Sharpies—we have an analog order system so it's important to have a pen on you at all times—then a slot for your towel that isn't going to soak through your pants.

Is it difficult dressing for work as a bartender? I think so. When I dress for work at Scofflaw, I have to wear a shirt that I'm OK getting stained or a shirt that a stain won't be so evident on. A lot of my favorite clothes, I don't really wear to work.

What's your favorite piece of clothing?

I guess I like shirts. ... It's a strange thing, I'm really into Mandarin collar shirts. I don't really see [them] often and I think that in all areas of my life ... it's important to stand out. That's potentially tied to my need for attention, but I just am attracted to things that are different. ... I have some weird ones from the '80s, just bizarre prints. I have a salmon-colored Mandarin collar shirt that I dig.

Where do you shop? I like to go into Meyvn. This new shop opened called Rocky & Luella on Fullerton just west of Kedzie. I like to go to Penelope's, and then probably as much as anything else I'll go to a lot of Unique [Thrift Stores] and Salvation Armys. That's just a gold mine, especially for shirts.

Is there any article of clothing you feel really uncomfortable in or dislike?

I try to rock bow ties, but it's impossible. I think that a lot of dressing is confidence and if you aren't confident, if you're not comfortable, I think that shows. If I'm in a bow tie, you'll definitely see me look a little off, feeling really self-conscious.

Is there anything you've worn that, looking back, makes you cringe?

I wore a lot of, like, the shirts on bustedtees.com. I wore a brown shirt that said, "Trust Me I'm A Doctor" in red velvet print. I'm pretty sure I was wearing that shirt the day I moved in to college.

Describe your personal style in three words.

Fun, high-contrast, comfortable.

Any parting advice?

Shop local. Spend money at the places you wish to see in the neighborhood.

What a man!

Chris Pratt is looking heroically handsome on the cover of GQ's Men of the Year issue—but he's not the only one. Steve Carell, Dave Chappelle, Ansel Elgort, Michael Sam and non-man Shailene Woodley each earned their own tuxedo-clad covers (the latter is the mag's "new favorite crush"). Pratt says that while he's had wild success in front of the camera as of late, he'd love to pull up a director's chair. "I'm always biting my tongue. When I'm on set, I kind of wish I could just tell everybody what to do." Just give it time.

THE DIGIT 210

That's how many grams of protein Hilary Swank ate a day while training for "Million Dollar Baby," she told The Hollywood Reporter during an event at the Loyola Marymount University School of Film & TV. "I had to eat 60 egg whites in a day and I couldn't. So every morning I would drink them. ... I put on 23 pounds of muscle," she said. Blerrrrrgggggg.

Heart cumber-broken

Ladies, Benedict Cumberbatch knows that you are heartbroken over his recent engagement to girlfriend Sophie Hunter, but it's time to move on. The "Sherlock" star, who appeared Monday on "Live with Kelly and Michael" to promote his new movie, "The Imitation Game," noted that, "I have a great population of fans as well—they're smart, they'll get around to the idea. ... Your ovaries do still have use, let me tell you!" Oh, Benedict, it's too early in the day to start talking about our ovaries.

The bride wore a cape!

Solange Knowles does everything in style—and her wedding this weekend to video director Alan Ferguson was no exception. Beyonce's sister wore a cream-colored, low-neck jumpsuit featuring a multilayered cape for the Atlanta celebration, according to Bey's Instagram, while her new husband added gold-tipped black shoes to his all-white ensemble

THE QUOTE

"'Fifty Shades of Grey.' [Laughs.]
That may be a little inappropriate for this setting. But yeah, I don't know, there are so many great books out there."

—Usher, to Vulture, on which book he'd choose first for his celebrity book club. His dream members, by the way, would be Morgan Freeman, Scarlett Johansson, Oprah Winfrey, SpongeBob SquarePants and Sean Connery, based mostly on their reading voices.
